

At the end of the lesson, the student will be able to:

- *state the different consequences of making risky choices that relates to this risky outdoor games.
- *create an image to show how bad choices can lead to setbacks.

Read:

Adventurers have always sought challenges: deeper jungles, wider oceans, newer worlds. But mountains have always been special. Perhaps it's their size, their power, their resistance to conquest. Climbers search not just for summits but also for themselves. They reach up to search within. One poet in the early 19th century wrote: "Great things are done when men and mountains meet."

That explains why risky business offering guided tours of the peak is increasing nowadays. New technology and equipment have also helped: lighter gear, warmer clothing, better radios and televisions.

But the community of high-mountain explorers now is gripped by soul-searching and second-guessing. Some of the dead were experienced guides who lost their lives trying to save less agile amateurs.

Comprehension

1. What do adventures always sought?
2. What makes the mountains special?
3. What do some climbers search in the mountains?

Let's Talk!

1. Why do you think some people perform dangerous activities?
2. Do you think amateur mountain climbers should be prohibited from challenging high mountains?
3. Many kinds of risks are taken in the name of sport. What do you think about boxing, especially women's boxing, bull fighting, and auto-racing? Do you think they should be allowed or prohibited?