

Everywhere we go, we always see people sleeping in the street. This seems to be a problem regardless of the country's economical status. The sight is nerve trembling. The worst fact is, it's increasing from day to day.

What are the possible reasons of this society's disease? There a lot of several reasons why homelessness is still gripping and has its claws buried regardless of the effort to eradicate it.

First, the housing cost is too high. These individuals can't afford to have the shelter and food at the same time. If they will be given a choice between shelter and food, food will always triumph.

Second, problems at home drive children and wives away. Domestic violence is too severe in some homes in the society that they run for comfort and security outside their homes, leaving them to be homeless.

Those are just few reasons of the existence of homelessness. How can this chain be break?
